

Russell Stephens' Regeneration

In Jonathan Swift's Gulliver's Travels, Gulliver is told of a race of immortal humans who never die but, unfortunately, never stop aging either. The romantic notion of eternal life, deflated in Gulliver's by Swift's icy irony, is treated with equal scepticism in Russell Stephens' intelligent and original new film, Regeneration. In this peculiar variation on the theme of eternity, dead people can be brought back to life, 're-generated', from photographs by means of a complex computer process. From this startling premise Stephens constructs a film which not only satirizes scientific utopianism, it also investigates the nature and significance of the image. And although Regeneration stumbles occasionally, it does represent, with its striking imagery and ambitious thematic concerns, the product of a distinctive cinematic imagination.

Premiered at the Vancouver International Film Festival, Regeneration evolved out of a shorter version Stephens made while attending Simon Fraser University. After graduation, he decided to expand his idea to feature-length and, with former classmate-cum-producer Tony Dean, a budget (including deferrals) of $330,000, and three years of shooting, the film was completed.

Using a fairy-tale narrative structure replete with storyteller (an Irish one, at that, telling his tale to two gravediggers) as well as some extreme character types, Regeneration concerns the unique discovery of "idiot savant" professor Andrew B. (John Anderson). From a photograph plucked from the lobby of Discovery Park (his high-tech employer), Professor B resurrects a dead colleague, Mr. Bright, bringing him back in the form of a mobile, articulate video camera (Clearly, this regeneration requires some physical adjustments by the regenerated!).

Revealing his achievement to a journalist, and lost in fantasies of fame ("smoked salmon steaks and the Letterman show"), the professor soon encounters unforeseen problems: thousands send snapshots to have loved ones or pets brought back; rabid crowds demonstrate to force the 'regeneration' of Elvis (Stephens' sly comment on the domination of American images in Canadian culture); a corporate crackdown is instigated by Mr. Bright's life insurance company which, after learning of his spectacular violation of policy, wants its money back - with interest. Discovery Park's board of directors decides to "terminate" Mr. Bright, seizes the Professor's lab, and dismisses him. Overhearing the news of his imminent disconnection, Mr. Bright heads, quite literally, for the hills.

Meanwhile, the head of Discovery Park, an executive shark named Mr. Funk (portrayed by Dermot Hennelly with a chilling Kubrickian blend of venomous charm and restrained madness), wants to use the professor's findings to prevent his own death. When his stooges, stealing B's research, fail to regenerate him from an old 8 X 10 glossy, Funk calls for the capture of Professor B.

It is evident from these strange happenings that this film explores its principal themes (immortality, power, ontology of the image), in an intentionally artificial cinematic universe. Regeneration is not traditional Canadian realism. The effects, comic or otherwise, arise out of the film's own set of idiosyncratic and provocative narrative possibilities. For Stephens, like John Paizs, form is content.

Throughout the twisted tale are examples, verbal and visual, of Stephens' witty, ironic perspective on myths of scientific progress and on utopian thinking. Indeed, his storyteller describes Discovery Park as "one of those high-tech places where all sorts of immoral experiments take place". In Regeneration's world, parking meters don't work, cars don't start or are piled in scrapyards, and doors won't always open. When you add human fallibility, self-delusion (when B talks of regenerating whole civilizations from mere fragments, Stephens visually subverts his protagonist's grandiloquence by cutting to an extreme long shot), and bestial corporate interests (the walls of Funk's office are adorned with animal heads) to the equation, a sceptical response to 'progress' isn't just appropriate, it is essential.

On another level, this deceptively whimsical film also ponders the significance of images, from the family snapshot to the life-size poster of Elvis. The politics of image-making, particularly the manipulative construction of television images, is explored, as is the notion of image as replacement for experience (cinema itself?); after all, Bright is actually a regenerated image trapped in an image-making device: a camera. These understated philosophical concerns give the film an interesting self-reflexive dimension.

Within the deliberate fairy-tale artifices of narrative and character in Regeneration, then, are found Stephens' strengths and weaknesses as a director. These artifices permit him to play more freely with ideas and images, but sometimes force the film's comic infrastructure to groan under the weight of the intellectual superstructure placed upon it. Moreover, his film is hurt by John Anderson's uneven and, despite the context of artifice, unconvincing performance as Professor B, for it often impedes Regeneration's tone and rhythm. Some bad post-synchronization doesn't help either. Nevertheless, Regeneration is generally well-written (there are some howlers, however), competently shot (several images are brilliantly composed), crisply edited, intellectually energetic, and, ultimately, a satisfying first film.

Tom McSorley •

REGENERATION d./sc. Russell Stephens p. Anthony James Dean prod. co. International Heliotrope Ltd. ed. Shirley Anne Claydon lighting design John Houtman d.o.p. Tobias Schliessler m. Bill Napier-Hemy cast. co-ord David Findlay assop p. Michael Tang prod. man. Jim Hamm prod. des. Keith Grout 1st a.d. Bruno Pacheco 2nd. a.d. Attila Bertalan sc. cont. Tracy Jeffrey assoc. film ed. Haida Paul gaffer John Houtman key grip Peter Reynolds dolly grip John Christie grips Gary Viola. Craig Kelpin add. photog. Cam North. Tom Turnbull asst. cam./2nd unit photog Dan Novak sd. mix. Tony Giacinti boom. Linda Andrews, Margo Vanderham ward sup. Jori Woodman ward asst. Dianna Paterson, Judy Radul make-up sup. Kathy Lofton make-up assts. Jenny Dodsworth, Kelly Faraday, Roy Richard prop co-ord Todd Pittson robotics co-ord Peter Reynolds Mr. Bright's Construction Ivo Kokan. Andrew MacFadyen set dec. Chris Beudet asst. set dec. Tom Crowe, Bill Mullen carp Chryse Gibson craft services SFU Student Union Pub, Andrew Dolemy driver Robin Mossley prod. assts. Nick Dharsee, Lavonne Girard, Paul Guenette, Gary Harvey, John Halliwell, April Hawes, Marcia Krendenster, Steve Mitchell, Maureen O'Hearn, Neil Thompson add. sd. rec. George Leger, Bill Napier-Hemy sd. eds. Shirley Claydon, Tony Dean asst sd. eds. Michael McGarry, Marek Cieszewski, Leanna Pietrobrown, Lodi Bulter m. ed. Debbie Rurak re-rec. mix. Barry P. Jones, Peter Kelly neg. conforming Gay Black prod. acc. Roland Dean post prod. admin and acc. Lodi Butler auditor Paul J. Masse, C.A. pub. David Hauka stills photog. Karen Hill storyboards Ken Lum, Keith Grout typing Carmen Michaud logo des. Don Wimbles title des. Dorothy Cameron stunt d. Ken Zirzinger Fil Lab Alpha cine Services titles and film opticals West Coast Film Opticals Video Post Prod. C.K.V.U. Television, Northwest communications With Special thanks To: Cineworks Independent Filmmakers Society, Telefilm Canada, National Film Board of Canada, the Canada Council, Tegra Industries, The Cutting Edge Video Service, BCE Development Corporation, Standard Building Supplies, Westminster Volkswagen, Benndorg Verster, Discovery Park (Burnaby, B.C.), University of British Columbia, Simon Fraser University, I.p. John Anderson Marek Cieszewski, Suzanne Ristic, Dermot Hennelly, Dennis Shooter, Michael Gandley, Rob Johnson, Toman Dimitri, Len Greenwood, Stephen Huddart, Rob Morton, Jeannette Wall, Colin Griffith, Wade MacIntyre, Chris Marioni, Gordon Anderson, Henry Flam, Rod Graham, Phil Smith, Kay Jackson, Tony Bardock, John Cotton, Hugh Coulson, Edna Drake, Paul Fruit, Robert Grace, Emma Hill, Eric Horsfal, Roman Podhora, Mark Jaworski, Harold Bernot, Dan Novak, Lorrie Peppin, Ian Tiles, Bob Molley, Terry Harrasym, Joy Dumaresque, Andre Renaud, Beatrice Zelinger, Don Marsh, Zena Dearwallor, Tim Dean, David Eddy, Branch Lyons, Neil MacDonald, Joseph MacLean, Ken Montgomery, Alison Stevenson, Dorothy Tinkley, Martin Cieszeski, Przemek Fedyczowski, Cleo Corbett, Jane Bull, Tracey Jeffrey, John

Christie, Ken Lum, Bill Mullen, Robert Mossley, Bill Napier-Hemy, April Hawes, Ellen Kareses, Maria Karases, Harry Rankin, Michael Jones, James Dean Hirtschfeld, John Jewel, Terry Birs, Roby Arden, Jim Hamm, Stan Rogel, Stokely Seip, Martin Jensen, Brandon Aiken, Judy Blair, Keith Grout, Jane MacDonald, Heidi Peltzer, Leanna Sheckter, Lila Stephens, Michella Armachello, Cindy Block, Julia MacIsaac, Norman Barrington-Foote, Steve Harrison, Valeda Hett, Michael McGarry, Tracey Stephens running time 85 min.

Francis Mankiewicz's And Then You Die

The publicity release for And Then You Die describes the film as "English Canada's first gangster movie." It isn't; having been preceded, at the very least, by Les Rose's The Life and Times of Edwin Alonzo Boyd (1983). Moving constantly between documentary and fiction sequences, Alonzo attempts a fascinating, open-ended examination of the changing relationships between a real-life Canadian gangster, the socio-economic milieu from which such a figure is spawned, and the contemporary media (as well as the film itself) which both (re)fabricates the gangster's image and exploits that image for profit. And Then You Die accomplishes none of these things.

And Then You Die tells the story of the final nine days of fictive Montreal gangster Eddie Griffin (Kenneth Welsh). Griffin's life and minor empire of drug dealing and loansharking come to an abrupt end due to a coincidental combination of betrayal, bad luck, misinformation, and uncharacteristically incorrect judgments on the part of the protagonist. In addition, Eddie is hounded by detective James McGrath (R.H. Thompson), apparently the only cop on the force whom Griffin cannot buy.

True to the sinuous weave of the plot, McGrath is only partially responsible for Griffin's death. It is McGrath who forces Griffin's cohort, Wally Deagan (Wayne Robson) to become a police informant. Later, attempting to extricate himself from this situation, Deagan asks Garou (Pierre Chagnon), the leader of a bike gang and one of Griffin's associates, to kill McGrath. Instead, Garou convinces Deagan to set up a hit on Griffin.

It is possible to abstract from this plot synopsis the major failings of the film. To begin with, the apparent intricacy of the plot attempts to function both as an index of the complexities of Griffin's dealings, and as a means of suggesting the size of his enterprise (and, thus, how great is its collapse). The size and intricacy of Griffin's 'empire' (to borrow a term from the press release) is loosely implied rather than demonstrated. This is a tactical error on the part of the screenwriters (Wayne Grigsby and Alun Hibbert). Since Griffin's empire is fundamental to character motivation - it is what Griffin

• Demonstrating for the return of the King in Regeneration

• R.H. Thompson and Kenneth Welsh parry in And Then You Die

desires to extend and what others desire to co-opt or eliminate – the audience must intuit the extent of Griffin's dealings in order to appreciate his plight. Otherwise, one is forced to ask: what empire? and so what?

And Then You Die is a classical narrative film. A clearer delineation, or a few examples thereof, of the day-to-day workings of Griffin's business practices would have provided an essential level of causality and character motivation. Instead, in the absence of this layer of 'realism' the screenwriters are forced to resort to a number of overused contrivances in order to generate audience sympathy. Moreover, these are never successfully integrated into the narrative. For example, Griffin's wife frequently complains that he does not spend enough time at home (an issue which the film fails to pursue), and the first attempt upon Griffin's life also places his son in danger (a pointless gimmick, but worth three hankies at least).

The failure to generate audience interest is traceable, as well, to the filmmakers' inability to properly define the characters in terms of a given locale, or to suggest how a given environment contributes to the definition of a character. It might be, as one Montreal critic has remarked, that the film's location photography provides a pleasant change from the CBC's Toronto soundstages. But the location shooting never rises above providing the audience with a chance to engage in an I-know-that-place practice. As well, the location shooting contributes nothing to the feeling or atmosphere of the film. The location photography, and whatever 'realism' that may accompany it, is purely pragmatic: the film is shot in working-class Montreal districts because that is where the story takes place.

It might be contended that the combination of Richard Leiterman's relatively high-key, dingy lighting and the working-class, nighttime locations makes obvious contributions to the feeling of the film as a gangster film. This is only partially true. Firstly, there is little raison d'être, and certainly nothing stylistically purposeful, in Leiterman's interior, nighttime cinematography that could contribute to the feeling of any scene. Again, the issue appears to be simple pragmatism: the scenes are lit to conform to the locations and times of day. Secondly, this is exactly the kind of sloppy, alternately dingy and indiscriminately lit cinematography that one finds in most of the films that Leiterman has photographed.

And Then You Die marks the English-language feature film debut for director Francis Mankiewicz, and one might have expected a more auspicious beginning. But it is difficult to lay blame in this case. Granted that Mankiewicz might not have felt at ease with the type of story he was telling, or the environment in which it is set. The problems with the script, and there are several, could not have made his task any easier. In addition, following a test screening in April 1987, the film underwent a major re-edit. Thus, it is impossible to speculate about Mankiewicz's original intentions. To the director's credit, the acting, at least, is often inspired. In particular, Dobson's performance as a consummate capitalist/gangster whose ego prevents him from seeing the impending chaos that has suddenly surrounded him, are memorable.

The overriding impression of And Then You Die is one of wasted effort. Consider the following. The initial problematic in the film, the animosity that McGrath feels towards Griffin and, as a result of this, McGrath's efforts to apprehend Griffin, creates a series of enigmas which the audience assumes that the film will eventually answer. For example, will Griffin be arrested? What mistakes will he make that will allow him to be arrested? Why is McGrath so obsessed with Griffin? It is questions such as these that the first half of the film sets-up and then dangles as a series of lures. And it is around these questions that the most intriguing relationship in the film, McGrath and Griffin, is predicated, and upon which McGrath's whole psychology is based.

These enigmas however, are not incorporated into the latter half of the film, the half in which Griffin's 'empire' unravels, the half in which these questions would appear to be closest to being answered. In the end, instead of an interesting psychological interplay between two antagonistic characters, one is left with a relationship whose exploration has been evaded, whose set-up has been wasted, and whose problematic, in retrospect, appears to have been nothing but forced. Had this occurred in Edwin Alonzo Boyd, such a set of circumstances might have accorded well with the open-ended nature of the film, but in a classical film such as And Then You Die the payoff for the audience is at a different level. And the result is nothing but disappointment.

Jeffrey Weigensberg •

AND THEN YOU DIE d. Francis Mankiewicz p. Brian McKenna sc. Wayne Grigsby. Alun Hibbert d.o.p. Richard Leiterman, c.s.c. assoc. p. Harris Verge exec. p. Bernard Zukerman film eds. Gordon McClellan, Alfonso Peccia sd. ed. Kevin Townshend casting Gail Carr art d. Miriam Wihak cost. des. Chris Drake cam. op. Andrew Binnington program consultants det. sgt. Kevin McGarr, Dan Burke asst. d. Howard Barish story ed. John Buell orig. m. Marty Simon unit man. Ginette Bertrand loc. man. Patty Lavoie cont. Wilma Alexander cam assists Kemp Archibald, Bill Stunden gaffer Eric Harris, Tom McMonigle, David Dool sd. rec. Gerry King boom Brian Newby asst. film. ed. Chantal Bowen effects ed. Steve Gorman re-rec Austin Grimaldi, Dino Pigat casting asst. Jon Comerford des. co-ord Peter Razmofsky

The 1987 Gemini Awards

We all desire congratulation. To be called up in front of an assembly of your peers and told that you have done a good job is surely the emotional pinnacle of success. Money is mere consolation by comparison.

Knowing this, one must respect the growing popularity of those industry-wide festivals of self-congratulation known as awards ceremonies. When the industry in question is entertainment, however, and the awards are broadcast, something peculiar happens. The awards ceremony becomes multi-purpose. It must, of course, congratulate the entertainers. It must also be entertainment. Combining these two functions is no problem. It's the third purpose that causes trouble. This is the unspoken – if not the unspeakable – reason for the ceremony: it must be a marketing tool.

Put these three together and you have a functional ménage à trois. The uneasiness of the combo was amply demonstrated on December 9, when Canada's TV industry aired The 1987 Gemini Awards.

Outwardly the program was slick: fast-paced, strongly framed and tightly scripted. Eugene Levy and Andrea Martin, the emcees, were given some very discerning commentary nicely couched in skit formats. Levy played the role of a hockey commentator before, during and after the awards/game. He talks of low-sticking at the outset, and of the blistering pace at the "end of the first period." At the conclusion of the show, an announcer tells us it has gone eight minutes overtime. Cute. Very cute.

Martin has a memorable skit as a broadcaster covering the Reagan/Gorbachev summit, 'Live from Washington'. Waiting in front of a camera she doesn't know is rolling, she yoohoos to Barbara Frum across the street, chats with the camera-man and flosses her teeth. Just at the moment she discovers she's on the air, the floss gets stuck. Like a true CBC professional, she proceeds in the face of adversity: delivering her report with a long string of dental floss hanging out of her mouth. As gross-outs go, this is delicious.

I take my hat off to the writers of this material.

My hat stays firmly on when it comes to the awards themselves.

Although the broadcast was live from the Metro Toronto Convention Centre, this was the second evening of awards. The Academy of Canadian Cinema and Television presents awards in so many categories that only about a third of this two-hour live broadcast was really live. Clips of the acceptance speeches from the evening before (framed by appallingly tacky graphics) filled in any slow moments which might have inadvertently created rhythm.

This was doubly jarring. The previous night's winners had all been shot in front of the same dull curtain with the camera in the same position. They were cut in the second they started speaking and cut out as they turned away from the podium. This left the impression of a vast queue of award-winners ducking in and out of a Woolworths' photomat. Very weird.

If these clips seemed rushed, airing them ensured that the live recipients' speeches were even more rushed. There was also something contrived about them: they lacked spontaneity, and I kept wondering if the acceptances had been scripted as well as the skits. As more and more speakers made reference to the shortage of time, I began to realize that the nominees had been allotted very little, and warned to prepare. Dinah Christie, accepting her award for Best Performance by a Lead Actress in a Continuing Comedy Series, gave it away: "I have between 20 and 30 seconds so I won't waste any time."

Between 20 and 30 seconds in which to be surprised, humbled, gracious, modest, thankful and as star-like as possible!

This is joke. These people have not been well and truly congratulated. They have been made to jump through hoops for the sake of the industry.

The exception, an ironic one, was Leslie Nielsen's eloquent and very moving tribute to Lorne Greene who was given the Earl Grey Award for distinguished achievement. Posthumously.

You will gather that I think the creators of this ceremony have erred in trying to make it too much of a marketing tool. I do. Yet it was a successful, marketing tool. Having seen the incandescent Kate Nelligan eclipsed by the astonishing Victoria Snow, I will not risk missing Daughters of the Country for which she won Best Actress in a Drama or Mini-Series. Apart from any other consideration, the woman has a jawline to inspire symphonies.

Similarly, I've been alerted to Heaven on Earth. Its lead, R.H. Thompson, lost out as Best Actor in a Drama or Mini-Series to the preposterous Booth Savage. Its writers, Margaret Atwood and Peter Pearson, were beaten for Best Writing for a Dramatic Program of Mini-Series by Sharon Riis (Daughters of the Country). No matter, I'll be glued to my set.

Night Heat received the award for Best Dramatic Series and, very deservedly, the TV Guide Award for Most Popular Program. One does not argue with arithmetic.

What can I tell you? I'm sold. We have superb actors in this country. We are making some great TV.

Now if only we could master the delicate art of congratulation...

Merv Walker •

p. David Acomba d. Ron Maraska m. dir. Dominic Troiano lighting dir. Ross Viner tech. p. Ray Beley.

Jacqueline Levitin's

Eva: Guerrillera

El Salvador, 1974. A truck bounces along a country road. The man and woman inside glance nervously at each other. The woman pulls a gun from the basket on her lap and jams in the cartridge...

The opening scene of Jacqueline Levitin's new feature film Eva Guerrillera shows a guerrilla attack on a government institution. Although the early action of the film gives a good account of some of the aspects of guerrilla warfare in El Salvador, the intent of the film is not to present a comprehensive critique of the brutal American-backed paramilitary forces. Instead the film gives a feminist account of the revolutionary process.

Documentation of the participation of women in the guerrilla armies of Central America is scarce. Margaret Randall is one of the few (English-speaking) writers to attempt such an analysis. Eva Guerrillera reads much like a screenplay of Randall's book Sandino's Daughters - Testimonies of Nicaraguan Women in Struggle. (In fact, for her own research, Levitin interviewed some of the women who appear in Randall's book.)

Eva (Angela Roa) is a fictionalized portrait of a young Salvadorean guerrilla fighter. While in Montreal, trying to recruit support for the FDR-FMLN (Democratic Revolutionary Front), Eva is interviewed by Louise (Carmen Ferland), a Canadian journalist researching female militancy. Through interview sessions with Louise, Eva's story - her active role in the struggle - is reconstructed.

It is ironic that the process of the Salvadorean revolution itself created the conditions that made it possible for women to break with the past and mobilize to demand full equality: that war brings freedom to the 'second sex'. Eva Guerrillera successfully presents this paradox. Although Levitin documents women's gains in the revolutionary army, she is careful not to overestimate them.

The role of women in Salvadorean society - their relationships as mothers, wives and daughters - altered as women became active participants in the revolution. The film accurately depicts the emerging feminist consciousness of the guerrillas, and their inevitable clash with machismo. In one scene, Eva talks about the pressure placed on women fighters to have compañeros (lovers). Women are expected to become sexually involved (to openly assert their femininity?). When Eva rejects the advances of one comrade, he accuses her of acting bourgeois. His anger and frustration at Eva's coolness is essentially a display of societal resistance to the changing male-female roles and class structures.

Motherhood is a recurring theme throughout the film. Pregnancy and children pose a problem for female fighters. Not only does pregnancy limit women physically, but women are usually faced with the sole responsibility of raising the children. Rather than take a less demanding administrative role, Eva chooses to terminate her pregnancy. Her abortion estranges Ramon, her compañero, who assumes she will have his child.

As the film progresses, it is apparent that the involvement of women in the struggle institutes a paradigmatic shift in the traditional attitudes of men. Women's equality is reflected in the sympathetic nature of Eva's subsequent lover Daniel, Marta's (Eva's cousin) strong role, both as mother and revolutionary leader, and a scene near the end of the film in which a couple publicly debates the support each should provide for their forthcoming child.

Although Eva Guerrillera offers positive examples of women's advanced status in society, Levitin is quick to point out some of the limitations. In El Salvador, the general struggle for freedom and women's emancipation are inseparable. Louise raises the obvious question: "Have you (Eva) thought about what happens after the war?" The question shows remarkable insight into the plight of women in Latin American countries and goes beyond the parameters of Randall's text. Some of the gains women have achieved during the resistance phase are lost after the war. For example, in Nicaragua, although many women hold positions in the Sandinista government, they have been completely removed from the military forces. (During the insurgency, over 30 percent of the army was comprised of women.)

The dialogue between Louise and Eva serves to emphasize the dichotomy between the Salvadorean and Canadian women's movements. Whereas Louise casually remarks that she is too busy for a family, Eva's decision to remain childless has left obvious emotional scars. As Eva recounts the death of her second lover Daniel, her loneliness, and perhaps guilt in not having a child, resonates through the film. In a country like Canada, Eva states, there is no reason not to have a family.

The major stumbling-block of the film lies in its attempt to step outside the portrait genre by introducing elements that are usually associated with a social issues documentary. In a sequence of clips, three mothers (Nicaraguan) talk about their own reactions upon learning of their daughters' revolutionary activities. These commentaries baldly interrupt the narrative flow. In another sequence, Louise makes reference to her trip to Algeria and her meetings with female revolutionaries there. Unfortunately, the obvious connection between Eva and the Algerian guerrillera is only briefly dealt with, and we never got Eva's response. Is she disinterested?

Levitin's motive for introducing these brief biographies is commendable - she is suggesting a collective political basis in women's experiences. However, these sequences are reduced to condensed information bleeps and are never fully developed to be effective. Perhaps their aesthetic shock value would have been extremely powerful had the editing pace been slower, and the collective theme integrated more fully into the whole filmic text. As it stands, the audience is unable to absorb the significance of these links, and I am left wondering if the effect was merely a wistful desire by Levitin to simulate through film Randall's literary style. (Randall juxtaposes interviews with revolutionary leaders, with interviews with their mothers, or people with whom they were close to.)

Eva Guerrillera is reminiscent of Cuban post-revolutionary cinema (Humberto Solas' Manuela, for example) Levitin has also managed to stretch the notion of what is political so as to include issues usually hidden and dismissed as personal. Yet, as Solas points out in interviews, social issues concerning women - the problem of machismo - undermines a woman's chances for self-fulfillment, but feed a whole subculture of underdevelopment.

That recurring flaw in low-budget productions - non-professional acting - unfortunately resurfaces in this film. The relationship between Eva and Louise never develops. The characters are stunted by the wooden performances of Carmen Ferland and Angela Roa (Roa's acting improves in the Spanish-speaking scenes). The strength of the script, however, keeps this film afloat. Eva Guerrillera is a well-researched socio-political inquiry into the lives of female guerrilla fighters. It is a film that asks all the right questions.

Karen Mazurkewich •

EVA: GUERRILLERA p./d./sc. Jacqueline Levitin cam. Jean-Charles Tremblay Asst. cam. German Gutierrez art d. Karine Lepp orig. m. Barry Gould sd. Juan Gutierrez boom Catherine Van Der Donk ed. Herve Kerlann, Jacqueline Levitin sd. ed. Richard Comeau prod. Soleil Films prod. man. Monique Crouillere sc. Marie-Christine Harvey art d. (Nicaragua) Anna Fuerstenberg chief elec. Kevin O'Leary elec. Don Terry 2nd a. d. Carla Nemirow l.p. Angela Roa, Carmen Ferland, Luis Lautaro Ruiz, Mendoza, Valentin Castillo Lopez, Gerardo Molineros Dor-mus, Jose Ricardo Centeno, Rosario Perez Hernandez, Felix Pena, Gloria Calero Morgen, Jose Manuel Poyela Robles, Gabriel Cosog, Roger Sanchez, Ciro Cesar, Rosa Maria Maute Salazar, Daniel Lemus, Juan Ramon Mis-ango distrib. Film Transit. Inc. (International) and CineQuebec colour 16mm running time 80 minutes

• Angela Roa armed for the guerrilla

THANK YOU.
IT'S BEEN A TERRIFIC YEAR.

With our warmest appreciation for your participation in these productions – we thank you.

DANGER BAY

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation / The Disney Channel

HOOVER VS. THE KENNEDYS

CTV Television Network / Operation Prime Time

MARTHA, RUTH & EDIE

Norstar Releasing / Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

MY SECRET IDENTITY

MCA-TV / CTV Television Network / Scholastic Productions

THE DAY THEY CAME TO ARREST THE BOOK

CBS Television / Ruby-Spears Pictures / Taft Entertainment

Sunrise Films Limited
160 Perth Avenue, Toronto, Ontario.

Danger Bay Productions Inc.
3737 Napier St. Burnaby, British Columbia.

Deepa Saltzman

Dilip Mehta

Paul Saltzman

Ellen Adams John Adams Phil Aiken Matsu Anderson Richard Anderson Fiona Andrew Real Andrews David Appleby
Genevieve Appleton Maria Armstrong Marin Ashbee Norma Bailey Tannis Baker Anke Bakker Blake Ballentine
Caroline Barclay John Barker Paul Barr Guenter Bartlik John Bassett Sr. Brenda Bazinet Linda Beath Debra Beers
William Beeton Hagan Beggs Danny Belley Debbie Bernstein Arden Bess Marco Bianco Jonie Billard May Bischof Toni Blay
Susan Bluttman Onli Boffing Michele Boland Crystine Booth Les Bori Billie Boyd Tom Braidwood Fred Brennan
Donald Briscoe Ian Brock Paul Brogren Rex Bromfield Don Brown Ralph Brunjes Andrea Burchill Terry Burke Beth Burns
Tom Butler Jim Byrnes Fred J. Boyd Jim Cameron John Cameron Carlo Campana Duncan Campbell Graeme Campbell
Nicholas Campbell Paul Campbell Wanda Cannon Evelyn Carr Glenn Carter Rudi Carter Elius Caruso Donald Caulfield
Rick Cavazzi Joyce Caveen Marc Champion Michelle B. Chan George Chapman Bryan Charboneau David Orin Charles
David Chiasson Deborah Cholette Gurdrun Christian Jeff Christensen David Chud Veronica Ciandre Wayne Clarkson
Liliane Clune Deborah Coe Brian Cole Emily Coleman Stan Coles Margaret Collier Douglas Colling Pat Colvert
Jill Compton Brian Cook John Cook Arthur Cooper Lynn Cormack Alyson Court Suzette Couture Christopher Crabb
Jim Craig Shelley Crawford Jonathan Crombie Dan Crosbie Martin Cummins Tony Currie Peter Curry Dixie Cutler
Jennifer Dale Janet Damp Lawrence Dane Manny Danelon Patrick Davidson Dorian Davis Bryan Day Reid Dennison
Paulo DeOliveira Pia Di Ciaula Jaro Dick Jane Dingle Tom Doherty James Doohan Richard Donat Rick Drew
Rosemary Dunsmore Tom Duquette John Eckert Lars Ekstrom Bob Ennis Stuart Ennis Tom Epstein Brioni Farrell
Neill Fearnley Alice Ferrier David Ferry Barry Flatman Kevin Fletcher Page Fletcher Richard Flower Robert Foley
Kim Forrest Fred Fox Jr. Ilana Frank Victoria Fraser Cindy Fret Michael Galbraith Doug Ganton LeLand Gantt
Jon Garland Timothy Garrett Imre Geist Don Gillis Barry Gilmore Ken Girotti Emil Glassbourg Joel Glickman
Jim Goessinger Carl Goldstein Laura Goldstein Wayne Goodchild Gill Goodman Linda Goranson Lynne Gorman
Perri Gorrara Terry Gould Tony Granick Dick Grant Peter Grau Charles Gray Mer Gray David Greene Rossie Grose
Marni Grossman Tony Guerin Maureen Gurney Joel Guthro Wendy Hallam Eda Hallinan Gina Hamilton Nada Harcourt
Madeleine Hardin Carol Hardon Denis Harvey Terry Hayes Karen Hazzard Nada Healy Pauline Heaton Ocean Hellman
David Herrington Gil Hewlitt Stefani Hewlitt Charlie Higgins Chris Hinton Christianne Hirt Libby Hodgson
Brenda Hoffert Paul Hoffert Michael Hogan Moira Holmes Greg Holmgren Ben Mark Holzberg George Horie
Clarence Horkey Jay Houpt Bill House Helen Hughes Dave Humphries Kathy Hutton Penny Hynam Michael Ironside
Voltr Ivanoffski Rob Iveson Irka Iwachiw Shonagh Jabour Tom Jackson Chappel Jaffe Lisa Jakub Ron James Miume Jan
Inta Janovskis David Jaguest Lisa Jensen Eric Johannessen Michael Johnson Barbara Johnston Cathy Johnson Linda Jones
Ken Jubenvill Lida Kalisz Sharon Kates Georgina Kay Barbara Kelly Lyn Kelly Sondra Kelly Marty Keltz Barry Kemp
John Kennedy Irene Kent Todd Kessler Doug Kiefer Andrea Kikot Allan King Walter Klausen Doug Koch Karina Kraenzle
Richard Kramer Alex Kutschera Mimi Kuzak Julie Lacey Mike Lacroix Martin Lager Alice Lake Denyse Lake
Margaret Langrick Peter Lavender Stephen Lawrence David Leach Reg LeBlanc Keith Leckie Ed Ledding Paul Ledoux
Bill Lee Deb LeFaive Doug Lennox Elizabeth Leslie Brian Levant Michael Levine Martin Lewis Rose Lewis Joyce Liggett
Ray Lord Ray Lorenz Carolyn Loucks Alexina Louie Aleida MacDonald Kenneth Macgregor Mick Mackay Paul MacKeigan
Jill MacLaughlan Janet Maclean Ron MacMillan Allan Magee Susan Maggi Kelly Makin Lilit Malins Chris Manning
Scott Mansfield Wilson Markle Andrea Martin Bruce Martin Lois Maxwell Roberta Mayer Lara Mazur Don McBrearty
Carol McBride Annette McCaffrey Clark McCarron Mary McCready Michaelin McDermott Greg McDougall Paul McGlashan
Derek McGrath Tom McIntyre Don McQueen Maureen McRae Anne Meara Isabelle Mejias Lynda Mercer Michael Mercer
Chris Merry Kris Michaels Tara Michaels Marvin Midwicki Edward Mikolic Martha Montagne Frank Moore Lee Moors
Marr Morgan Glen Morley Walter Moroz Doug Morris Barry Morse Dawn Mortensen Gilbert Moses Michele Moses
Peter Muldoon Madelyn Mulvaney Judy Murdock Sylvia Nablo Diane Neufeld Murray Newman David Nichols
Peter Nicolakakos David Niven Glenn Norman David Novek Jerry O'Connell Michael O'Farrell Brian O'Hara
Michael O'Herlihy Barbara O'Kelly Alice O'Neill Robert O'Ree Laurel Oats James Oswald David Owen Don Owen
Greg Palermo Ron Paley Connie Parker Diane Parsons Joe Partington Alex Pauk Irene Pauzer Melissa Peabody
T. W. Peacocke Dennis Pellarin Rick Perotto Gary Phipps Rita Picard Karen Pidgurski Robert Pine Paul Pollio Kim Powers
Dorothy Precious Jason Priestly Lisa Prince Nigel Protter Donald Quan Paul Quigley Fiii Quinn Branco Racki
Tony Ramsey Virginia Rankin Jeremy Ratchford Damon Redfern Barry Reid Carol Reid Alyson Reisman Gloria Reuben
Deborah Rhind Donnelly Rhodes Anne Richardson Gairey Richardson Bruce Rider Vic Rigler Bruce Robb Cathy Robertson
Trish Robinson Rock Rollins Tony Rosato Enid Rose Jack Rowan Glenda Roy Penny Royce Ben Rusi Robin Russell
Bob Ryan Ray Sager Anna Sandor Devyani Saltzman Morris Saltzman August Schellenberg Bruce Scott Neil Seale
Djanet Sears Daniel Selznick Chris Severn Chuck Shamata Kymberly Sheppard Susan Shipton Lawrence Shragg Mark Silver
Alan Simmonds Ian Simmons Peter Simpson Kerry Sims Gurbir Singh Frank Siracusa Dan Sissons Nicki Skinner
Errol Slue John Smith Paul Soles Michelle St. John Rick Stadder Jane Startz Don Stede Jessica Steen Morgan Stevens
Jane Still Marc Strange Daniele Suissa Emmanuel Suzara Anne Tait David Tait David Taylor Ian Taylor Paul Taylor
David Templeton Peter Thillaye Heather Thomas Jane Thompson Madeline Thompson Sunny Thrasher Harold Tichenor
Kevin Tierney Alison Till Cheryl-Ann Tracey Kate Trotter Reynald Trudel Rita Tucker Brad Turner Richard Uber
Patti Unger Cathy Vallely Joanna Vannicola David Vaughan Jana Veverka Kathy Vieira Susan Walden Brian Walker
Sara Walker Andrew Ward Jack Warden Carlton Watson Cary Watson Judy Watt Fred Weinrauch Arthur Weinthal
Eric Weinthal Bob Wertheimer Delphine White Lloyd White Pete White Brad Whitlock Debbie Williams Peter Williams
Lorna Wilson Rick Wincenty Arthur Winkler Robert Wisden Matthew Wolchock Erika Wolfe Carolyn Wong W.J. Wood
Sheila Woodley Steve Wright Rick Young Paul Zaza David Zitzerman