

REVIEWS

One would like to see many more Canadian films in this vein; not necessarily autobiographical films using non-professional actors – there are many fine actors still working in Canada – but ones which would, above all, show the variety of Canadian life and reflect the personality of the filmmaker. During the seventies a whole school of filmmakers showed this kind of promise. But so far, they have no chance to go beyond a few tentative television productions, such as Bruce Pitman's Hailey's Gift, Martin Lavut's War Brides, Peter Rowe's Horse Latitudes and Rex Bromfield's Love at First Sight. These are the kind of 'personal' filmmakers the CFDC should be encouraging – instead of forcing them to starve, or work on schlock, look-alike, American films.

Alan Collins ●

ALLIGATOR SHOES

d./sc. Clay Borris p. Clay Borris, John F. Phillips exec. p. Don Haig, Barry Shapiro assoc. p. Paul Caulfield d.o.p. John F. Phillips ed. Gordon McLellan sd. Brian Richmond mus. Murray McLaughlan electronic score Eugene Martynec lighting Robert Holmes p. man. Nick J. Gray a.d. Dennis Chapman asst. cam. John Gundy 3rd a.d. Colin Brunton best boy Dave Roberts boom Carol McBride cont. Barbara Ratz stills Anita Olanick key grip Mike Ray pub. Jack Cunningham l.p. Garry Borris, Ronald Jones, Clay Borris, Rose Mallis-Borris, Len Perry, Simone Champagne, Gary Furlong, Guy Lefebvre, Rick Pappa, Rene Pappa, Philip Williams, Dave Roberts, Tony Hill, Gerry Whitmore, Doris Chiasson, Karen Williams, Sheila Morgan Wood, Gary Boisvert, Ginny Borris and P.J. Aziz as the Stunt Driver p.c. Alligator Shoes 460231 Ontario Ltd. (1980) col. 16mm/35mm (English with French subtitles) running time 98 min. dist. New Cinema

William Fruet's Cries in the Night

Cries in the Night is your basic horror-house thriller. A young city girl (promising 15-year-old Lesleh Donaldson) spends a summer holiday in the country with her granny (Kay Hawtrey). Grandpa mysteriously skipped out many years ago. But lo, there are mysterious voices arguing in the basement... Not to mention a retarded handyman, the obligatory black cat aspy and ascreech, a ghoulish setting, and a plot climax that rises like the mythical phoenix from the ashes of Norman Bates.

But a tasteful pallor hangs over the proceedings. The film does not deliver the extremity or the volume of fright that the C-movie ads promise. Did director William Fruet rein up on the gore in deference to the CFDC funding? Or might it be that Fruet does not really wear his heart in the lowlands where his recent art has been slumming?

At first sight the career of William Fruet seems to have plunged from his award-winning Wedding in White (1972) to the box-office lurids of bile in black. But in most of his commercial films, there is a hint of sensitivity and intelligence all but buried in his brutishness. In his most scandalous commercial work, Death Weekend, one sensed that the violation of the vacuous Brenda Vaccaro was not meant to be as upsetting as the jobs' violence upon dentist (oops, Oral Surgeon) Chuck Shamata's material goods. But box office being what it is, the threat of rape eventually took over the film.

In his fine 1978 thriller, Search and Destroy, Fruet produced a kind of low-budget and straight version of 1941. He brought the Vietnam war to the complacent American homeland. In addition, there was real wit in transplanting the Viet Cong lines to the plastic romance and glitz of Niagara Falls, das honeymoon kapital of the whirled. Indeed, apart from her glamorous make-up, Tisa Farrow's quivering simp recalled Carol Kane's pathetic wimp from Wedding in White.

And so to Cries in the Night, a $1,400,000 romp filmed in 1979 but withheld pending arrangements for U.S. distribution. Amid its grisly flab there is a quiet, sensitive film crying to get out.

The smothered story shows a young girl awakening into the promise of womanhood, but overwhelmed by a horrifying parade of dead love. The supporting cast of grotesques dispels her romantic expectations of maturity. Harvey Atkin plays a repulsive traveling salesman secreted away with an equally obnoxious sweet patootie. Then there's Barry Morse, still chasing a fugitive after all these years. This time he's tracking down his wife, who ran off with the heroine's grandpa.

Most importantly, there's Granny Chalmers herself. Her attempt to convert the family funeral home into a cozy tourist inn is as romantic and futile a gesture as her attempt to keep alive her departed hubby's romantic character. Inevitably, the funeral aspect rises out of the cellar to overwhelm the romantic notions of the tourist home. Another nightmare sweeps through the Niagara Falls of the mind.

But for all the potential of wife Ida Nelson's screenplay, Fruet's film does not free that aspect. The psychological center is abandoned in favor of the horror-house hoaries.

Too bad. Through all these films Fruet shows a sensitivity towards the collision between innocence – whether delicate or deluded – and the harshness of the social reality. But for the master's voice to be heard, it will have to shake free from the formulae and rhetoric of American gothic.

But then, Cries in the Night went to Cannes in 1980 and was sold to Norway, Spain, Argentina, the West Indies, etc. Maybe Fruet doesn't want to quarrel with such success.

Maurice Yacowar ●

CRIES IN THE NIGHT p. William Fruet exec. p. Barry Allen assoc. p. Patrick Doyle d. Director: William Fruet a.d. Roy Sager sc. Ida Nelson cont. Marie Therese Boily d.o.p. Mark Irwin, CSC cam. op. Robin Miller stills Rick Porter grip Maris Janson gaf. Jock Brandis ed. Ralph Brunjes, CFE sd. ed. Wayne Griffin sd. op. Ian Hendry sd. mix Joseph Grimaldi art d. Roy Forge Smith, Susan Longmire ward. Mary Jane McCarty make-up Shonagh Jabour sp. efx. Dennis Pike props Michael Fruet animal handler Karl Mitchell mus. Jerry Fielding p.a. Geoff Martin p. man. Patrick Doyle l.p. Lesleh Ann Donaldson, Kay Hawtrey, Barry Morse, Stephen Miller, Dean Garbett, Alfred Humphreys, Harvey Atkin, Peggy Mahon, Jack Van Evera, Les Rubie, Bob Warner, Linda Dalby. p.c. Production Co.: Northampton Productions Ltd. (1980) col. 35 mm running time 103 min. dist. Frontier Amusements.

Alfred Sole's Tanya's Island

A natural suspicion is aroused – things being what they are in our film industry – when a co-production company has a name like Rainier Energy Resources Inc. That suspicion deepens when the film in question has sat around for over a year, in spite of the ballyhoo and cheesecake that attended its creation. It was hardly surprising, therefore, that the brief appearance of Tanya's Island on Toronto's screens elicited hoots and catcalls from the critical fraternity.

Still, those who have called this picture the year's worst are perhaps over-reacting. After all, 1981 has already seen the likes of My Bloody Valentine, Kelly, Dirty Tricks and Happy Birthday to Me. Pierre Brousseau's production has a lot of competition in the turkey sweepstakes.

Such as it is, the plot involves the erotic fantasy of a Toronto model (D.D. Winters) who imagines herself and her boyfriend – a surly artist appropriately named Lobo (Richard Sargent) – on an island. But they are not, as they believe, alone. The other occupant is an ape-like creature whom Tanya suddenly discovers. After an initial shock, she befriends him and names him Blue. The essential conflict is thus set, as the two males battle each other for the female's body.

Pierre Brousseau's idea is just bizarre enough to sustain a passing interest, but the screenplay is totally lacking in anything approaching craft. Clearly, he has seen his fair share of Roger Vadim, and has absorbed from him a view of women of which could only be called retrograde. If the theme is, ostensibly, that all men are essentially beasts in sexual matters, he also maintains that all women are passive and willing to be bound, for Tanya offers only perfunctory resistance.

As Lobo, in his contest for physical mastery with Blue, degenerates intellectually (if such is possible), he blackens his face 'guerilla'-style (feeble pun obviously intended) in a racist slur that becomes all the more objectionable as it progresses. Director Alfred Sole may have an intention to make a witty remark with an allusion to Apocalypse Now, as he does with an earlier reference to Mighty Joe Young, but heavy-handed, utterly unbelievable dialogue ruins whatever effect he has in mind.

With respect to D.D. Winters, no useful comment on her acting can be made, since she is given the vocabulary of a child. She has a properly exotic body, of which much is seen, but only the more innocent of audiences (like the Ontario Censors, who ruled that "some scenes may be offensive"), would call her trysts with man and near-man daringly erotic. Richard Sargent has studied (and not very well) in the Jan-Michel Vincent/Perry King school of acting, and Don McCloud, the figure in the monkey suit, doesn't speak, so his reputation is safe.

Never a dull moment for Cries' Lesleh Donaldson.

But in two areas, Tanya's Island doesn't need to apologize. Mark Irwin's cinematography is effective and lush. Though he couldn't have realized it at the time, his work calls to mind and bears favorable comparison to Nestor Almendros' work in The Blue Lagoon and Caleb Deschanel's in The Black Stallion. The ape make-up was created by Rick Baker, who rather specializes in simians (King Kong, The Incredible Shrinking Woman) and Bob Bottin (The Fog, The Howling). They have their own humorous touch, in giving Blue a face that bears a disconcerting resemblance to Sterling Hayden.

One's sympathy, however, goes out to Alfred Sole whose bad luck seems to be holding. His previous film, Communion, was well received at festivals in 1977, but only got scattered release under the title Alice, Sweet Alice before the distributor, Allied Artists, collapsed. A carefully plotted horror film, set in his hometown of Paterson, New Jersey, it stands miles above the current stab-and-chase fare, but it could only be released (now called Holy Terror) by playing up the small role played by the then very innocent-looking Brooke Shields (only 10 years old at the time), in what was her first film part. Its tight control is in sharp contrast to the meandering and heavily edited Tanya's Island, but Alfred Sole's name is still in the credits.

J. Paul Costabile •

Losing her bearings? D.D. Winters is back to basics in Tanya's Island.

TANYA'S ISLAND

d. Alfred Sole a.d. David Shepherd, Steve Wright p. Pierre Brousseau co-p. Rainier Energy Resources Inc. exec. p. Pierre Brousseau, Jean-Claude Levesque assoc. p. Daniel Kingstone p. man. Frank Rosetti sc. Pierre Brousseau d.o.p. Mark Irwin, csc cam. op. Robin Miller gaf. Jock Brandis, Carlo Campana grip Maris Jansons, Scotty Allen sd. engineer Brian Day boom Tom Mather superv. ed. Andrew Henderson, cfe ed. Michael MacLaverly, cfe sd. ed. Peter Burgess mus. Jean Musy art d. Angelo Stea ward. Julie Ganton make-up/hair Shonah Jabour spec. efx make-up Richard A. Baker, Rob Bottin p. acct. Wayne Aaron set dresser Enrico Campana l.p. D.D. Winters, Richard Sargent, Don McCloud, Mariette Lévesque, Mark Irwin stills Denis Fugère p.c. Pierre Brousseau Productions (1979) col. Film House, 35mm running time 91 min. (original version), 82 min. (N. Am. version) dist. New World-Mutual (English Can.), Les Films Mutuels Ltee (Quebec)

SHORTS

Paul Shapiro's
Clown White

Producer Martin Harbury picked up on an idea that had been circulating among a few Toronto filmmakers for some four years, to make a film on deafness and mime. That was over three years ago, and the result is Clown White, a fifty-minute television film. In telling the story of a rebellious deaf child who goes on a class outing to the city, where he runs away, Harbury got himself in for more than he bargained for. "The whole field of deafness is a vast and complicated one," says Harbury. "Everyone has very strong viewpoints, so we had to tread a very delicate path."

This delicate path concerns the ways in which deaf children are taught to communicate. Clown White doesn't comment on these ways - indeed, its strength lies in its open-mindedness towards the various approaches used by the concerned adults in the film. It does, however, throw a curve into any handbook approach, considering the film's central character, Jason, a very bright but frustrated and uncommunicative boy about ten years old. Jason's isolation goes beyond the fact of his deafness. He appears singular in his alienation, even in his school class of fellow hearing-impaired children; we often see him through glass partitions or even as a background silhouette.

The best efforts of his teacher - an earnest, concerned man played with evident enthusiasm by Saul Rubinek - fail to reach him. When the boy defaces a school wall with chalk drawings of clown faces (an image which repeatedly intrigues him), his teacher feels compelled to respond punitively by barring Jason from a class trip to the Planetarium. Not easily deterred, Jason stows away on the expedition. Found out, and about to receive more punishment, he breaks loose and runs off into the midst of the city, pausing first to complete his freedom by discarding the Phonic Ear amplifier that remains his only link with the world of hearing. He returns to a store window where a mime in white-face (played by Lorene Yarnell of the famous American mime duo, Shields and Yarnell), has been performing. Through her and the gestures of mime he finds a mode of expression that satisfies him; he returns to the school group, now in white-face himself, with good cheer and a spirit of reconciliation.

What Clown White has done best is to depict sympathetically the world around Jason. With one or two hard-hearted exceptions, everyone tries in his own fashion to be helpful, even the otherwise anti-social bus driver whom the children love; this last is played by Michael Ironside, widely seen this year in David Cronenberg's Scanners. Jason's classmates are all tenderly created composites of children that Harbury and director Paul Shapiro met while researching the film in various institutions for the deaf around Toronto. Each of them is portrayed distinctly, rather than as part of an amorphous group of secondary characters, reflecting the care with which the film was made.

The film is Harbury's second dramatic project but it is no accident that his background is primarily that of a documentary filmmaker. Clown White is an extensively researched film whose story evolved from Harbury's and Shapiro's encounters with the deaf community. The children in the film were selected from among the 45 hearing-impaired youngsters that were auditioned, part of the largely positive response that the project received in that community. The

Clown White's Lorene Yarnell and Mark Dillon photo: Ron Watts.

